Today is International Day of Older Persons

The average life expectancy has increased by 20 years since 1950 and is expected to keep increasing. With changing attitudes towards retirement, today is a great day to celebrate those more mature than others!

International Day of Older Persons

76 year-old Don Niccol has retired five times and says he is accelerating not slowing down.

In 1984 he built a prototype alternative airship and still has the original model. Now, he wants to change the world; he's come up with an alternative power source solution that bypasses the generation of electricity by using compressed air.

Don believes the secrets to a happy old age are maintaining connections with people, acceptance that life doesn't dish you out a smooth path and keeping a spiritual connection. "The main bonus to getting older is that you don't really have to worry about the future because it's so short anyway."

June and granddaughter Janie share a laugh.

"Some people loose their dream. I've got a mind that still wonders and dreams."

"Retiring is about having the time to do what you're passionate about."

Let's take the opportunity today to learn from an older persons skills and life experiences.
